

SCREENPRINTING

◦ WORKSHOP for schools

A unique collaboration between Melbourne artist, teachers & students, designed so school groups from clubs to Visual Communication and art classes can print their own tshirts.

WHAT'S INCLUDED

- We help students design and prepare their own artwork.
- We demonstrate the processes and techniques involved in screenprinting over the two-hour workshop.
- We provide students with information so they can print at home.
- Students can print their own garments, fabric and tote bags, or we can supply quality garments at a reasonable price.
- We use only eco-friendly and non-toxic inks.

We provide all the resource material (including handouts). The class and teacher create the initial design. We prepare the artwork, expose the silkscreen and then arrive with all of the equipment and materials required.

During the two-hour workshop the students are given a short introductory talk. They are then divided into task related teams, where each student is taught how to prepare a silkscreen, print and heatset their own items. At the end of the workshop you will have your school club, event or class tshirts printed by the students themselves.

THE PRESENTERS

We are both established design and screen printing professionals working in the fashion industry, with our own clothing labels.

David Marsh (Mr Bucket)

David has over 25 years experience as a designer. His label "Mr Bucket" has gained a cult following while he also freelances as a graphic designer. His business also includes a commercial screen printing operation. He began presenting to schools after presenting to Vis. Comm. students at Melbourne Museum "Top Design".

Katy Robinson (Captain Robbo)

After many years perfecting her art as a screen printer and a good few years of printmaking at RMIT and SCU, Katy left her job to become Captain Robbo and her range of Adventure Pants leggings were born. Her designer range now include hoodies, dresses and tops. Katy has run workshops at music festivals and from her studio store.

Why Print Your Own Tshirts?

Students love to screenprint. They get a unique satisfaction in learning the process, then going from a digital design to a garment they have printed themselves.

Part of the reason why this workshop is so accessible is because if you were to simply order your garments from a commercial screenprinter the price would be comparable (Approx. $300 printing for 50 garments).

You get the tshirts & the workshop, all created over a fun, informative, team-building two hours.

The great team of students and teacher Emily from Footscray City Theatre Studies, who printed their own tees for their production of the musical Sweeney Todd.
